My 2¢

The First Law of Thermodynamics states that matter is not created or destroyed, only transformed. The same law applies to television, where programs are not created from scratch or destroyed, but constantly transformed.

About seven years ago, Norman Horowitz wrote that, when he was at Columbia Pictures in the 1970s, a friend asked him what he did for a living. Norman explained (I'm paraphrasing, in reality, knowing Norman, it is possible that he took half a day to elaborate) that his job was to sell stuff to television stations outside the United States and sell TV re-runs and movies inside of the States. At this point the friend — rather confused — interjected: "Norman, you are in the used film business!"

If one thinks about it, the whole television industry revolves around the "used" business model. After all, the U.S. film industry started with some entrepreneurs that came from the garment business selling "used" clothes.

Many years ago, in the early days of television, the industry's business model was based on "sponsored content," where a company, like Procter & Gamble, would pay to be associated with a TV soap opera such as As the World Turns. This concept was also "used" since it was taken from the old radio days.

Today, sponsored content is called by various names: branded content, sponsored verticals, barker show, profile builder, etc. The fact remains, however, that it is still a "used" business model. The 60-second TV spot, too, is a used concept dating from colonial America when Benjamin Franklin's Pennsylvania Gazette used to place short advertisements next to editorial material.

And, lingering on the advertising business, TV commercials use songs because they stay in viewers' minds. Naturally, with television's habit of re-naming used concepts, in this case, they're called jingles. And even TV ratings use an old model developed by test marketing in the 1920s.

Then, there is the business of worldwide content distribution, which, considering the multiple windows now involved, is not only "used," but also "re-used."

Today, film and TV producers and broadcasters are more comfortable with tried and true "used" concepts than original untested ones, and the public enjoys watching re-runs of TV shows as much as multiple incarnations of Spiderman.

Indeed, the "used" TV business has created a new sector spearheaded by such TV channels as TVLand and programming blocks like Nickelodeon's Nick at Nite, which re-use classic shows. This is in addition to a plethora of cooking shows that take us back to the used and reused early TV style.

And what about the complex business of residuals, which is based on the simple concept that talent should be paid on "used" runs?

The "used" business model is also used by the fashion industry (they call it retro). And, according to an article in New York Magazine last March, we now have an increasing number of feminists who choose to stay home and are called "retro wives," who are happy to be in the business of their grandmothers.

The irony is that we at VideoAge, studio executives and 1,500 program buyers from 340 organizations in 70 countries around the world are all here in Hollywood welcoming and celebrating the arrival of a brand "new" TV season, when in reality what we see and have seen has been "used," if not re-used.

In conclusion, if at first the expression "used film business" generates some laughter, or at least a chuckle or two, the reality is more sober, since there isn't anything to second-guess about the secondhand business.

Dom Serafini

If one thinks about it, the whole television industry revolves around the "used" business model

New Israeli TV Station

A new Israeli television channel dubbed i24news, will broadcast news 24 hours a day in English, French and Arabic, starting this summer. i24news will incorporate state-of-the-art technology, applications for cell phones, video-on-demand, a website, and offer 24-hour news coverage in three languages. The channel will be based in Jaffa Port near Tel Aviv.

According to Carlos Burovich, head of production for i24news, the channel will compete with established global news outlets like Al Jazeera and will be funded privately. Partial funding will come from French-Israeli businessman and telecommunications mogul Patrick Drahi. Frank Melloul, a former French government adviser on security and disarmament, will be the chief executive.

The channel will air live news reports daily from 6 a.m. to midnight and taped programming during the remaining time. Plus, i24news will launch a website in English, French and Arabic simultaneously with the channel launch. Programming will include hard news, interviews and news magazines, and the current staff of 45 is projected to grow to approximately 150.

Amazon In The OTT Biz

Following Apple TV and Roku, here comes Amazon TV. Reportedly, the company is developing a TV set-top box (STB) to stream TV content to consumers.

Currently, Amazon operates five video services for its 150,000 titles both by mail and via the Internet, using several platforms. It is not clear whether Amazon Video STB — which may be called Kindle TV and priced at under $100 — would itself become a platform or limit the offerings to only its titles.

Web Pirates Shut Down

The Italian Postal Police has closed 27 illegal video streaming sites throughout Italy that made use of remote servers located in various countries.

The police acted after Indian film company Sunshine Pictures filed charges with the assistance of SIAE, the Italian residual and copyrights content organization.

Using servers located in 14 countries including Australia, the U.S.A., China, Russia and Romania, the pirates were able to stream over 400,000 movies, some of which are still in theaters, causing losses estimated at $1.5 billion euro (U.S.$1.95 billion). It is considered Europe's largest crackdown on pirate streaming services.

Bell Media Funds Talent Growth

Toronto-based Bell Media announced a C$1 million-a-year initiative to train emerging producers known as the Media Producer Accelerator Lab. The new initiative comes after launching a $1.8 million-a-year program for TV skills development.

Bell Media is part of Bell Canada (with C$20 billion-a-year revenue) which owns, among other media properties, CTV, Canada's largest TV network.

The Accelerator Lab's funding has no end date. Similarly, the TV Skills Development Initiative is for varying amounts of time, according to Bell Media spokesperson, Anika Malik. 🇨🇦

Airline Seats 101

In 1962, the width of the American backside in the seated position averaged 35 cm for men and 36 for women. In 2002 a study showed an average increase to more than 38 cm.

The male hip, which the airline industry has used to determine seat width, is the wrong dimension. The widest part of the body is the shoulder/arm area. The result: Airline seats are approximately 13 cm too narrow, even for passengers in the 1960s.

Current standard coach seat widths range from 43 to 48 cm between the armrests, known in the industry as "living space."

However, in airline-seat speak the operative word is "pitch," defined as the distance between one point on a seat and the same point on the seat behind. A typical seat pitch in coach measures 78 to 89 cm.

In a traditional reclining airline seat, only the seatback moves. But with an articulating seat pan, as the back moves to the rear, the seat pan moves forward, so the back of the seat doesn't move as far as it once did. Because the seat doesn't require as much room to recline, there's space for more seats. New economy class seats will allow for six additional coach seats per plane.

Swiss Television Programs

In volo con un'Ape Travelling on a Bee

The author of this documentary has travelled along the Rhone river, from its source to its mouth, on... a three-wheeled Ape pick-up (Ape - pronounced ah-peh - is the Italian word for bee). On his 1,000 km long journey in Switzerland and France, he has come across people of different cultures and gained some insight into centuries of history.

Italian, English subtitled - 53' - 2012

Transumanza Transhumance

Ernestino and Renza have chosen to do without the comforts of a home in order to live 365 days a year amongst their herd, perpetuating a tradition which goes back several thousand years and is today threatened by encroaching concrete, pollution and declining valuation of wool and meat.

Italian, English subtitled - 65' - 2013
